

ABSTRACT

A system and method of cooling a steam turbine having internal moving components to a predetermined temperature by controlling a flow of nitrogen through the turbine, thus decreasing the downtime associated with maintaining the turbine.
5 This provides a more efficient and cost effective method of operating a power plant.